The feeling in the town today is that there will be no more bloodsned, but even the most conservative admit that the slightest incident may bring about more trouble. A report, ostensibly originating in Cincinnati, reached Homestead today that Pinkerton detectives were being shipped from there to the seat of the difficulty and caused some excitement for a while, but the almost general belief that no further attempts will be made to quell the trouble with Pinkerton men soon quieted the agitation. Man. HOMESTEAD, July 8 .- Robert Herbert, in charge of the Pittsburg Dispatch bureau at Homestead, is under the disbureau at Homestead, is under the dis-pleasure of some of the workingmen. They claim that he is personally unfriendly to them, though his dispatches to his papers they admit are not prejudiced against them, but they seem possessed of the idea that, he is personally un-friendly to them, and tonight a squad of pickets saw Mr. Herbert at the West-ern Union office and essorted him to ern Union office and escorted him to near their headquarters, where he was subjected to an examination concerning his feeling toward the cause. His answers were not satisfactory. Prevented from making more than a vigorous protest, by the number of his captors, he was escorted across the river and piaced on a train across the river and placed on a train for Pittsburg. Mr. Hall, another mem-ber of the Dispatch staff, was also or-dered to leave town, but such extreme measures as those exacted in the case of Mr. Herbert were not taken.

Mass Meeting to Be Held. This morning opened as quietly as is possible for a railroad town. No signs of trouble were visible, and up to 11 o'clock there had been no occurrence of a startling nature, not even an alarming report. The strained situation is beginning to show its effects. Sentiment in the town is all with the strikers, but the tradesmen and others do not go the length the most radical first of the lightships constructed at Wheeler's yard, Bay City, for sait water service, is completed. of the men wish to go, and they are quietly endeavoring to have order and the usual rule once more, and to do away with the present chaotic con-dition of public affairs in which every man assumes to be an officer, and the workingmen's leaders give orders as if they were the properly constituted au-thorities. This condition of things is burting business, and many of the men with interests fear that it will hurt the town permanently. A mass meeting has been called to meet in the rink where the Pinkertons were confined, and an effort will probably made to induce the men to agree to permit deputies to take charge of the works. Lawyer Cox of Homestead will probably speak for the persons in favor of giving way to the ordinary forms of law. The sheriff is expected during the day and it is said he will have just one man as an escort. The men are extremely bitter against the Pinkertona and will meet them in every way possble. It is believed that they have an intention to try the law if an opportunity presents itself. They propose to see whether or not it is lawful to send an armed force of men alien to the state into it. Another attempt on the part of the Pinkertons is apprehended and there is a nervous dred of what is to come. The regulation of the organization is at stake and Pinkerton's known pride in his system is expected to show itself in his willingness to again to show itself in his willingness to again make an effort to force his way into the works. Against such an attempt the strikers will array all the power they have. They are watching every point and have assistance from many quarters in which valuable and could be rendered. The railroad men are in hearty approach. hearty sympathy with them in the

SMITHSON AND HIS REPUTATION.

Gilead.

He May Have Been a Poor Actor, but Smithson, once an actor, has had for a long time the reputation of being a cold-hearted, designing, crafty fellow. He has come by this reputation gradually; no one knows exactly when the first symptoms of coldness showed them-selves. Some of his old time acquaint-ances say that since the day following his summary dismissal from the Play-well company Smithson has been a changed man. Not a few of them think that there is now no hope for him. There are a few optimists, however, who believe that in Smithson's heart there still burns a flame of kindliness that only needs to be fed to make him the whole souled, splendid fellow he was a few years ago.

This small band of optimists met in the flat of one of their number the other night. The conversation drifted from one subject to another. They talked of the propositions for membership in the Players, and about other subjects of interest to actor folk. Finally, Augustus Frankville said, "Fellows, I have good news about Smithson."

"Good! what is it?" they all cried in

"Well," continued Frankville, "I was walking down Sixth avenue from the park this afternoon when I saw him walking about a block ahead of me in a most shiftless and dejected manner. From what I could see of him I was sure that he was desperately hungry. His general appearance was bad. I concluded to keep an eye on him and to find out if possible how he was, keeping body and soul together. He is too proud to beg from his former friends,

It was late in the afternoon and the free lunch had mostly disappeared. There was left only one piece of corned beef and two miserable slices of bread. Smithson made for that counter totally oblivious to everything and with as much decorum as one could expect from a hungry man.

"He lost no time in making a sand-wich out of what remained on the lunch The report that Sheriff McCleary is responsible for the appearance of the counter. He looked at it eagerly and hand appeared under the small swinging door and tugged at his coat. At the same time in a sharp whisper there came this appeal from the owner of the hand: Say, mister, give us a sandwich? I'm hungry.' "Poor old Smithson cast one glance at the sandwich and another at the dirty hand of the street boy. In an instant he put the sandwich into the dirty hand. The lunch counter was left bare and Smithson's stomach was empty. I tell you, fellows, old, broken down Smithson has been maligned."

Upon breaking these eggs they were found to contain the yolk and yellow in the same proportion found in other eggs, and in addition to this each one contained another perfectly formed egg of a yolk and yellow inclosed in a hard well formed shell. This inner egg is of the shape and size of the ordinary hen's egg. One of these peculiar combinations was opened at one end enough to let out the ingredients of the large eggs, while the inclosed still remains incased in the outer shell and will be care fully preserved for inspection by the curious.—Centralia (Mo.) Austrian Jow Baiters Thrashed. In a Prater restaurant a few evenings ago a young and clean shaven man was ested alone at a table with a glass of beer before him. Three men came in and sat down at the same table. They thought the beardless youth was a Jew and began to annoy him. For some time he kept perfectly quiet and pretended not to notice them. As they continued to amuse themselves, suddenly he up and faced the three, who had risen simultaneously. Without saying a word he placed himself in a boxing attitude, and in a few seconds the three "Jew" baiters lay in a heap on the floor with their faces bruised. On recovering they left the place.
